

[0049] A method for facilitating display of content in a browser window includes receiving a user request for content, determining that the requested content cannot be displayed in a browser window using a single page, and generating code which, when executed, causes the display of the requested content to be divided into multiple frames. Each frame displays a portion of the requested content. The frames displayed in the browser window appear to the user as a single page containing the requested content.